

U.S. District Court for the District of Puerto Rico. I would have supported his nomination.

Mr. COLEMAN. Mr. President, I rise today to discuss the Secure Fence Act of 2006 and the issue of securing our northern border. Without question, securing the border is our most vital need in dealing with illegal immigrants and as it stands, our borders lay vulnerable to not only an influx of illegal immigrants but also transportation of dangerous materials. The facts are clear—each year over 1 million unauthorized aliens are interdicted entering the country mostly on the southwest border. Testimony by the Border Patrol union chief places the estimate of illegal entrants not interdicted by Border Patrol to be two times those actually caught. Simply put, the Border Patrol is overwhelmed by the sheer volume of the traffic and it is time to take action.

The Secure Fence Act of 2006 requires the Secretary of Homeland Security to take all appropriate actions to achieve operational control over all U.S. international land and maritime borders within 18 months of its enactment. Additionally, the bill authorizes 700 miles of double-layered fencing at specified locations along the almost 2,000-mile southwest U.S. international border with Mexico.

This bill also takes the right approach in terms of northern border security. The legislation requires the Department of Homeland Security to conduct a study on the feasibility of a state-of-the-art infrastructure security system along the northern international land and maritime border of the United States. The study shall include the necessity of implementing such a system, the feasibility of implementing such a system and the economic impact implementing such a system will have along the northern border.

In my home state of Minnesota, we share 547 miles of border with Canada and 458 of those miles are a water boundary. I want to make it clear to my constituents and our Canadian friends that this legislation should not be used to justify construction of a wall along the northern border but to take an inventory of the systems that are working and not working and ensure that we put in place the most effective approach. We are going to measure twice before building once.

The United States and Canada share a long history of working together on issues of mutual concern. Both countries share a common border and common objectives: to ensure that the border is open for business, but closed to crime. The Canada-United States Smart Border Declaration and Action Plan and programs such as the Security and Prosperity Partnership and the Integrated Border Enforcement Teams are great examples of cooperative initiatives that have proven successful.

I am fully confident this strong relationship and commitment to border security will continue as it is one of the cornerstones to securing our northern border.

NATIONAL EMPLOY OLDER WORKERS WEEK

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize National Employ Older Workers Week, a time to celebrate the many older workers who are redefining retirement and the employers that welcome their talents.

Many older Americans do not see retirement as just a period of leisure; they continue to contribute to our nation's businesses, communities, and economy. And some employers, facing a shortage of skilled and experienced workers, have recognized the value of older workers by changing their policies to attract and retain them.

One of those employers is Mercy Health System, which is based in Wisconsin and has 63 health care facilities across Wisconsin and Illinois. AARP recently ranked Mercy Health System the top employer for older workers in the country. Mercy Health System attracts and retains older workers by providing flexible work options, like its Work-to-Retire Program, which offers reduced and seasonal work schedules while maintaining health benefits.

Yet too few employers have followed Mercy Health System's lead in creating better work options for older Americans. While most older workers want to work past traditional retirement age, many do not want to work a traditional full-time schedule. Today, only about one-third of older workers have flexible work schedules. Even when employers offer flexible work options like part-time work schedules, most do not also offer benefits: only 22 percent of part-time workers have access to health benefits.

So while older workers and some employers have begun to reinvent retirement, we have a long way to go. That is why I authored the Older Worker Opportunity Act, which aims to expand opportunities for older Americans to work longer if they so choose. The centerpiece of this legislation is a tax credit for employers that offer flexible, reduced, or seasonal work schedules to older workers while maintaining their health and pension benefits. Such a credit would reward employers like Mercy Health System who are doing the right thing, while encouraging other employers to follow their lead. Greater workplace flexibility would not only benefit older Americans, but would also reduce employer costs by increasing productivity and job retention.

Just this week, the National Committee to Preserve Social Security and Medicare endorsed the Older Worker Opportunity Act. In its letter of support, president and CEO Barbara Kennelly offered that the bill "could help pave the way for significant increases in older worker employment." I agree, and I am proud to have them join our other supporters, including the National Council on Aging, the National Older Worker Career Center, Watson Wyatt Worldwide, the Committee for Economic Development, the Association of Jewish Family and Children's Agencies, and United Jewish Communities. With their backing, this bill will continue to gain steam.

During National Employ Older Workers Week, we also celebrate the Senior Community Service Employment Program—SCSEP—which has provided community service and job training to low-income seniors for 40 years. As our baby boomers age and seniors become a growing share of the population, we must strengthen SCSEP so that all eligible seniors get the help they need. Many of us were concerned when the Administration proposed a major overhaul of this program, which would have been disruptive to both grantees and participants. I am hopeful that the Older Americans Act reauthorization bill will preserve the basic structure of the program and build on its success.

I urge Congress to pass the OAA reauthorization as soon as possible so that seniors in need of SCSEP services have the tools to stay active in the workforce and their communities. But beyond reauthorization, we must also boost SCSEP's funding, which is currently only enough to serve less than one percent of the eligible population. As a member of the Appropriations Committee, I will continue to press for additional funding so that all older Americans who want or need to work longer have the opportunity to do so.

As older Americans live longer and healthier lives, most have the ability and desire to remain active. Some want to maintain physical and mental health, some need to improve their financial security, and some want to continue to contribute to society. Whatever the reason, it's time to change the way we think about retirement. Older Americans are a valuable asset to our nation's businesses, communities, and economy, and we must tap their reservoir of experience and talents. Our seniors deserve it, and our economic future may well depend on it.

CHILD AND FAMILY SERVICES IMPROVEMENT ACT

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, yesterday, the House of Representatives passed the Senate amendment to S. 3525, which represents the bipartisan and bicameral agreement on the Child and Family Services Improvement Act of 2006.

I was pleased to have introduced the Senate amendment with my friend and partner on the Senate Finance Committee, Senator MAX BAUCUS. Senator BAUCUS and I were joined by Senator ORRIN G. HATCH, and Senator JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. and Senator OLYMPIA J. SNOWE. All of these members have a long history of support for important programs to improve the well-being of children.
